If any demand for an increase under this head from Hongkong is in contem plation we can only hope the War Office will be content to wait until we are as fortunately situated as our friends in the Straits. This wi doubtless commend itself to the legislators Valse and people of the Straits Settlements as thoroughly wise and sound policy, fully justified by the remarkable and rapid progress already made by the Native States. In one of these States, the lates under British protection, Hong kong may be said to have a vested interest through one of its local Companies. Sir Croil Smith speaks of Pahang as "the most favoured by nature in its mineral and agricultural resources of all the States in the Malay Peninsula," so that, i this estimate be correct, the Punjom Company, with its two hundred aguare miles of land, ought to see some return for its out lay, even if it be found that gold mining does not pay. Of the total estimated revenue of the

Straits Settlements for next year, $4,389,389, no less than $2,916,600 is credited to the Opium and Spirit Farm, being an increase of $624,000 on the present income from that source. Hongkong will also derive a substantial increase from opium next year, the Farm being let from March next at $477,000 per annum as against the present rent of $182,400. The next letting will doubtless show a further substantial advance, as there is no reason why the value of the Farm bere should not increase in the same proportion as that of the Straits Opium and Spirit Firm, which has grown from G. H. Potts $663,090 in 1868 to its present handsome F. W. Firth figure. The numerous and expensive public works required will, however, absorb all available funds, and not for many years to H. Robbins, A.M. come will Hongkong find itself in the happy position of having, like Singapore, a large credit balance. It is understood that the house tax is to be reduced next year, which 124 will absorb a considerable portion of the increase from the Opium Farm. As revenue, however, shows a good surplus over raising a further loan to defrav cost of the extraordinary public works progress or projected has been ap Editor, not for publication, but as evidence of good proved, Sir WILLIAM DES VOUX will we anticipate, be able to make a very a tisfactory statement when he presents his first budget. The peasant lived apon land formng part of the estate of Prince Ostersky, whose ancestors were plundered and expelled from their possessions by the Tartars, and there is little or no doubt that the treasure and other articles found date from this period. Levetchke was at work for ten years in making this discovery, which includes, besides many precious articles and manuscripts, 12 large boxes filled with very ancient coins of fine gold. The total value of the find is given at 17,000,000 roubles, two-thirds of which go to the State and one-third to Levetchko, whose share will amount to approximately

In the last issue of the United States Consular Reports the Consuls at Cadiz and Jerez de la Fronters return to the subject of the adulteration of sherry on which they recently reported most unfavourably. Mr. Ingraham, of Cadiz, sends translation of a circular from the Spanish Minister of the Interior to the civil governors of the province directing prosecutions against the makers and vendors of adulterated wines in accordance with a Royal decree against adulteradecree—(1) Natural wines which contain impure industrial alcohol and alcohol from husks (cascard f they are not rectified and purified; (2) salicylic soid and other antiseptic substances; (8) foreign coloured substances, those derived from the products of pit coal (sic), as well as of vegetable or other origin; (1) artificial glucose sugar from flour, or new wine; (5) glycering. In a report on the trade in sherry for last year, Mr. Ingraham says:—"Old houses admit that the demand for low-priced wines compale them to yield reluctantly and compete for the market by using Berlin spirits for rectification at one balf the The £25 to £30 a butt, according to vintage, while German alcohol is selling at £13 a butt, under To yor of Jerez declares that all the misfortunes of the winegrower arise from the use of vernment and to improve their condition com- tieth of that annually imported into Spain.

> In his report on the trade of Lisbon for the total imports for consumption in Portugal and total customs duties levied during the same year amounted to £1.966.950, but in these were inthe actual amount of duties upon goods imported for consumption, and is equivalent to nearly 421 per cent. upon their value. When it is remembered how large a part of imports consists of raw material of every kind which either enters duty free or pays but a nominal duty, some idea may be obtained from these figures of the excessive pressure of the duties upon foreign manufactures, amounting in many, instances to virtual prohibition. Mr. Brackenbury records a case of his own. He imported for the use of his family eight plain iron bedsteads neatly painted, and each with a wire mattress attached to it. The retail cost price in England of the eight complete was £10 6s., upon which be paid in actual duties, not including costs of freight carriage, &c., £12 13s. 4d., or more than 122 per cent, on the retail cost of the beds in England. Hence clumsy and old-fashioned iron beds of hative manufacture have a monopoly of the market. Yet the trade of Portugal has increased, in spite of a severe agricultural orisis which began about five years ago and has been growing more and more acute ever since. The Pornguese farmer has sustained great lesses in that period by the fleree competition of American wheat, but this has been compensated to some guese wines. A ourious feature of Portuguese trade is the manner in which it is concentrated at two great ports-Liebou and Oporto. In 1887 Lisbon had 594 per cent. of the total trade, Oporto 27 per cent. leaving only 131 per cent. for all the other ports. This is a tendency creased development of communication and with according to the contract, should make Lisbon the most important port in the Peninsula

CHAPTER XXV. THE SQUIRE GIVES HIS CONSENT. Edward Cossoy did not come away from the scene of his engagement in a very happy or down. triumphant tone of mind. Ida's, bitter words stung like whips, and he understood, as she clearly meant he should understand, that it was only in consideration of the money advanced that she had consented to become his wife. Now, however satisfactory it may be to be rich shough to purchase your heart's desire in this fashion, it is not altogether soothing to the pride of a nineteenth century man to be continually reminded by the thought that he is a buyer in the market and nothing but a buyer. Of course, he saw clearly enough that there was an object in all this—he saw that Ida, by making obvious her dislike, wished to disgust him with his bargain. and escape from an alliance of which the prosprot was hateful to her. But he had no intention of being so easily discouraged. In the first place his passion for the woman was as a devouring flame, eating ever at his heart. In that at any rate he was sincere; he did love her so far as his nature was capable of love, or at any rate he had the keenest desire to make her his wife. A delicate-minded man would probably have shrunk from forcing himself upon a woman under parallel circumstances; but Edward Cossev did not happen to fall into that category,

Accordingly, at half-past ten o'clock, he arrived and was shown into the vestibule. where he found the old gentleman standing with his back to the fire and plunged in reflection. "Well, Mr. de la Molle," said Edward, rather due. nerrously, so soon as he had shaken hands, "I do not know if Ida has spoken to you about what took place between us yesterday."

"Yes," he said, "yes, she told me something to the effect that she had accepted a proposal of marriage from you subject to my consent, of him. course; but really the whole thing is so sudden that I have hardly had time to consider it."
